

Dearest Bunny;

This is Service Club stationery and the only thing I have available to write on so here goes.

I've had another very easy day and have done nothing constructive except getting myself a haircut which will improve my appearance slightly if anything can.

Tomorrow I'm going to thumb to Lansing with Mac & Gene Goldfader. I hope we have good luck so I can spend a lot of time with you tomorrow. Each minute means a lot now Darling.

You know I think Mac is very much in love with Jere. I saw him tonite and was talking to him

I couldn't help noticing a letter lying on the bed which closed with "All my Love — Jere". I never would've thought it but I guess it must be so. Poor Mac!

Gosh, I hope it's nice out tomorrow. We may be able to have a picnic Sunday if it is. That would certainly be wonderful. I'll keep on hoping & maybe it'll be nice.

Luis Roldan is leaving. He and two other fellows are going to Military Intelligence School at Camp Ritchie, Maryland and are getting a seven day delay en route which is a seven day furlough. The lucky boys. I hope some of the rest of us get as good a break, including me.

Whenever anyone in the barracks gets hungry he comes right over to me. See the reputation the Robson family is giving me. I am looked on as the larder for barracks 1445.

One of the regular corporals in the company got my goat today. It seems he drew a guard detail for tomorrow and I heard him muttering aloud about what "damned shame it was about those — — —

A.S.T.'s, the brains, who didn't even know how to fire a gun after being in the Army for over a year." He just made me burn and I told him it was too damned bad he didn't like us but that it didn't worry me too much. He really burned me and that's no fooling. There are a lot of army jobs

we can do that he could never learn Pardon me while I snigger. It's a good thing we won't be assigned together because I know we would definitely not get along well.

Guess I'll call it a day now.
Darling. I still have to press my uniform and get ready for tomorrow.
Got to present a good appearance you know. Bye now. Take care of yourself.

All my love & kisses
Freddie
